THEME 2: FINANCE FUTURE-PROOF OPERATIONS WITH DATA-DRIVEN DECISIONS

11:45 AM – 12:30 PM

PANEL SYMPOSIUM: USING OUR DATA ACCESS EFFECTIVELY TO ENGAGE WITH OTHER DEPARTMENTS AND MOVING TOWARDS BIGGER PICTURE WORK

What could you do if just 10% of your entire day's work could be automated? You could dedicate that time to research; to training and developing the skills of your team, or even develop a new business case over a few months. Now what if 50% of your entire day's work is automated? Would your entire value to the business change? Leaders in the finance space need to be prepared for the drastic time-saving opportunities that are now available, and a serious discussion about what leaders do with this free time needs to be prioritised. By automating the majority of the finance process, leaders will incrementally find themselves involved with higher-value work and becoming higher value members of the organisation.

- Setting the plan for future 'free' time by prioritising analytical and strategic skills
- Discovering what is possible when it comes to 'autonomous' finance functions and debating if it is even possible
- Creating time-use-cases – learning what will become the next big time-sink for the finance leader

THEME 6: CRUNCH TIME FOR FINANCE LEADERS: ADAPTING TO EXPANDING ROLES IN A CHANGING LANDSCAPE

14:20 PM – 15:05 PM

PANEL SYMPOSIUM: PROFIT AT WHAT COST? THE ETHICAL DILEMMAS FACING MODERN FINANCE LEADERS

Are we sacrificing long-term sustainability for short-term gains? How do we reconcile profitability with ethical business practices? In a world where profitability is often the primary measure of success, finance leaders face increasing scrutiny over how they operate and make decisions. Failure to focus on these questions and ethical lapses can lead to significant financial risks, including fines, legal actions, and reputational damage. Whether these new ethical dilemmas are warranted or not, trends show that they are here to stay, and so the question becomes how we as leaders deal with them in the best possible way. We have a chance to lead by example and create a corporate culture that not only tackles these new challenges head-on but makes them easier for us as leaders to handle in the future.

- Setting precedents to drive brand loyalty and sustainable growth at the expense of short-term gain
- Creating a culture of transparency in order to mitigate catastrophic PR crises

15:05 PM – 15:35 PM

SPEAKING SLOT: 'OLD FINANCE' VS 'NEW FINANCE': A GENERATIONAL DISCUSSION ON LEADERSHIP IN FINANCE

Finance leaders should be experts in people and communication as much as they are experts in accounting. A major part of understanding people is culture and language, and when we initially think of culture and language we think of regional or national variations. But what about generational? Arguably a greater shifting force for corporate culture has been the induction of younger employees, who bring new social pressures; with novelty becoming authority over the tenure of their careers. The time has come to bring together 4 generations of Finance leaders from Baby Boomers to Generation Z.

- Defining the generations by exploring the core characteristics and where they differ or overlap.
- Understanding our definitions of finance leadership and how our perceptions of what classifies as "good" leadership have changed
- Utilising 'New Finance' to bridge the gaps between generational differences to create better leadership overall.
